disease and visit many booths to get information about other healthcare concerns. The RACH pharmacy encourages retirees to bring a list of all medications they take for review by a pharmacist to look for potential problems. The hospital will offer a special lunch in the dining facility to honor the retirees.

Sept. 21, retirees will be special guests at the Fort Sill retirement ceremony on the Old Post Quadrangle. After the ceremony the garrison will provide buses for two tours. One tour will go to the Field Artillery and Air Defense Artillery museums, while the other will go to the Fort Sill National Historic museum and historic district. Afterwards, retirees may eat lunch with Soldiers at Garcia dining facility.

"We think it will be great for Soldiers to meet these veterans from World War II, Korea and Vietnam. We even have quite a few veterans from the recent Gulf wars," Winburn said.

The highlight of Friday evening's activities is the annual retiree appreciation banquet, featuring retired Air Force Lt. Col. Shane Ostrom who is the Benefits Information Department deputy director for Military Officers Association of America.

"The banquet is the most popular thing we do. Last year we planned to seat 375 retirees and their spouses, and we had to find seating for an additional 25 guests who signed up at the last minute. This year we are planning for more than 400 people," Winburn said. "We charge $10 for the banquet tickets, but that only covers part of the costs. The retiree council picks up the difference with the funds we raise through the annual golf tournament in May and other sponsorships. That's why I'm so proud of the Fort Sill retiree council."

Winburn encourages retirees to make their appointments early and to sign up for the banquet as soon as possible. Tickets can be reserved by calling the RSO office at 442-2645/2451. Training, education essential for good security

Did you know that all Department of the Army employees are required to have Information Security refresher training annually as part of the Security Education Training Awareness (SETA) program?

Security education is continuous, rather than periodic and has a great influence on individual security performance. Unlike other mandatory training, the circulation of directives or similar material on a "read-and-initial" basis does not fulfill the requirement of Army Regulation 380-5.

The key to a successful security program is a well-trained and educated workforce. In addition, all unit personnel must be knowledgeable of security requirements and their personal responsibilities for safeguarding classified or sensitive information. Informed personnel are equipped to handle themselves and classified materials in such a way as to reduce security violations and the ensuing damage cause by them.

Now, who should provide training?

Commanders are responsible for establishing security education programs; this responsibility normally is passed down to the organizations security manager. Security and Intelligence Division (S & ID), DPTMS, helps lighten the burden on commanders and unit security personnel by providing quarterly SETA briefings.

session which includes several mandatory security disciplines.

S & ID coordinates and conducts quarterly SETA sessions which include information security; physical security and crime prevention; foreign disclosure, threat awareness and reporting program (TARP); operations security (OPSEC) and personal identifying information (PII).

Training is held on two consecutive days with two training sessions per day starting at 8:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

Each session is about three and a half hours in duration. Training is provided by subject matter experts from S & ID, the Directorate of Emergency Services, 902nd Military Intelligence Group, Plans and Operations, DPTMS, and the Directorate of Human Resources.

These professionals facilitate training and answer any security questions in their respective areas. There are 16 SETA sessions schedule per year.

All DA personnel (military, civilians and contractors) assigned to Fort Sill are encouraged to attend one of the scheduled sessions.

So you ask, "Where do I go to take advantage of this training?"

SETA for the fourth quarter of fiscal 2012 is Sept. 11 and 12 in Kerwin Auditorium, Snow Hall, Building 730.

Attendance at only one session is required to meet your annual training requirement.

Unit security managers are responsible for providing training to personnel who are unable to attend one of the scheduled training sessions.

The SETA training schedule for fiscal 2013 will be published soon. First quarter training is tentatively scheduled for Dec. 12 and 13.

In addition to presenting quarterly SETA, S & ID also conducts quarterly training for newly appointed security managers, refresher training for experienced security personnel and coordinates the annual Lawton-Fort Sill security managers' conference.

Training and conferences provide an essential forum to network with other security professionals and receive up-to-date security information.

Each is an important part of the Fort Sill security program. Watch for additional information on these events.
