

Webster University offers tuition grants

Webster University is stepping up to provide military students with access to funds for their education following the suspension of Department of Defense tuition assistance (TA) funds because of the sequestration.

Through the Webster Military Tuition Assistance Protection (MTAP) plan, eligible and qualifying current, transfer and new students will receive a Webster grant covering the suspended TA payment.

“We are very proud to continue serving our military during this time,” said Sandra Kunz, Fort Sill/Tinker Air Force Base Webster campuses senior director. “Our military students thought they would not be able to continue with coursework because of TA cessation. Now, they have the opportunity to continue their educational goals.”

Webster University is offering the MTAP plan which includes:

- No application fee for new degree-seeking students or transfer students.
- A grant covering up to $250 per credit hour to replace the suspended government TA funds.
- A refund for current Webster University students registered for the Spring II term who have already replaced the suspended government TA funds with their own monies.
- Immediate assistance for spring and summer enrollment.

This grant can be used for undergraduate or graduate classes — both in-class and online at any Webster University, including 39 military locations. Grants will be given for Spring II, which began March 18, and for the summer term, unless the military tuition assistance is reinstated.

When the military tuition assistance is reinstated, the Webster MTAP plan will cease. Students interested in pursuing Webster’s MTAP plan should contact the Webster location of their choice.
